This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Lyttelton charters now preserved at Hagley Hall have received at various times much more attention than many similar collections of family muniments can boast of. They bear every appearance of having been, of late years, at any rate, well cared for; and it is chiefly to the interest that Charles Lyttelton, Bishop of Carlisle from 1762 to 1768, brother of the first Lord Lyttelton, took in the evidences of his family that such a satisfactory state of things may be attributed. As President of the Society of Antiquaries[1] he would, as a matter of course, set great store on ancient records, of whatever character; and that he was well acquainted with and valued those of his own family is evidenced by his autograph endorsements upon them. He seems, however, to have made but little effort to put them in any systematic order, although signs are not wanting that he made some attempt to arrange them locally. He doubtless soon found out, what others have done, that a local classification of deeds, such as those under notice, must, sooner or later, fail. Such a plan would be practicable if each deed concerned one place alone; but when, as is so often the case, three or four, or even more places form the subject of one grant, the plan at once breaks down.

When, therefore, on my first visit to Hagley in the spring of 1892, this was pointed out to Lord Cobham, he readily adopted the suggestion to make a complete chronological series of his muniments. The present book is the outcome of that suggestion.

[1] On the Bishop's death, in 1768, the Society of Antiquaries came into possession of a part of the Habington MSS., relating to Worcestershire, so often quoted by Nash and others. The collection was formed by Thomas Habington, of Hinlip, who died in 1647.

There are 461 deeds described in this catalogue, ranging from the time of Henry II to that of Charles II; but there is at Hagley a chest containing about 500 less important deeds, from 1485 to 1783, also arranged chronologically, the brief calendar of which remains, in manuscript, with Lord Cobham.

In the Appendix, on pp. 114-121, transcripts of ten of the more interesting deeds have been given. These are followed by an exhaustive index, in which every name and place appears, and care has been taken to record vicars, bailiffs, abbots, and similar officials.

As the majority of the deeds refer to a few places only, and as everyone may not have an easy opportunity of consulting the pages of Nash, the historian of Worcestershire, I may be pardoned for introducing here a short account of one or two of those places, namely, Frankley, Halesowen, Warley-Wigorn, Over Arley, and Hagley. It should be noted that Nash had free access to the Lyttelton charters, and has printed many of them in extenso. The subjoined notes are principally derived from his Collections for the History of Worcestershire.

1. Frankley, the home of the Lytteltons from circ. 1250 to 1642, once formed part of the larger parish of Halesowen, and was subject to the Barony of Dudley. In the time of William the Conqueror, William FitzAnsculph held that Barony, and in Domesday Book the entry concerning Frankley runs as follows: "Isdem Willelmus tenet Franchelie et Baldwinus de eo." It is not easy to trace by successive steps the descent of the Barony of Dudley, as authorities differ considerably upon the exact succession, but perhaps that subjoined below is fairly reliable[1]:

[1] Cf. H. S. Grazebrook's article on the Barony of Dudley in the Herald and Genealogist, v, 97; and Blore's History and Antiquities of the County of Rutland, p. 90.

The Barony remained with the Somerie family till 1322, when another John de Somerie dying without offspring, and his property being divided between his two sisters, Margaret, wife of John de Sutton, and Joan, wife of Thomas de Botetourt, Knt., Frankley Manor fell to the latter's share, her husband thus becoming jure uxoris Lord of Frankley. The manor remained with the Botetourts till the time of Henry VI.

But, for our present purpose, we have less to do with the Barons of Dudley, even in their character as lords paramount of Frankley, than with the actual tenants of that manor. BALDWIN, as we have seen, was tenant under William FitzAnsculph, and after a gap of nearly a hundred years, namely, in temp. Hen. II, the name of another tenant is recorded, BERNARD[1] de Frankeleye. He was almost immediately followed by PHILIP[2] de Frankeley, the son of Philip de Wygornia, from whom the following table, showing the descent of the manor, and leading up to the earliest Lutteltons, who, it is thought, took their name from South Luttelton, may, with some degree of accuracy, be constructed. Those whose names are printed in capitals held the manor.

[2] Nash's Collections, etc., for Worcestershire.

[1] The numbers in square brackets refer to the number of the deeds in the present book corroborating the several points.

[2] Simon is everywhere stated to have had but one child, a daughter Emma, who succeeded him, and was wife to Thomas de Luttelton; but, after reading Nos. 4 and 21 of the present collection, I can come to no other conclusion than this, that not only did he have a daughter Margery, but at least one son, Philip, Lord of Frankley, and possibly another son Ralph (cf. No. 10), though, from his position among the witnesses, the Simon there mentioned may not be identical with Simon, Lord of Frankley.

[3] Witness to grant to Evesham Abbey in 1160. Cf. Collins's Peerage, viii, 316.)

[4] Nash, in his Lyttelton Pedigree, vol. i, p. 493, is evidently in

I must confess to an inability to explain Deed No. 50. There is mentioned in it a Christina, Domina de Frankeley. Thinking I had misread Christina in its shortened form for Emma, I have again had an opportunity of examining the deed. It runs: "Sciant presentes et futuri quod ego Nicholas de Frankeley, filius et heres Angeri de Tatlynton concessi . . . Nicholao de Wythemale militi . . . totum redditum meum in villa de Frankeley . . . scilicet illum redditum qui michi contingit post mortem Christine quondam domine de Frankeley que quidem Christina habuit et tenuit predictum redditum in eadem villa nomine dotis sue," etc. The deed is dated 1302. Two things suggest themselves, either that she was the widow of Philip de Frankley, father of the first Emma [refer to table], and had a life interest in the manor on her husband's death, or that the deed is a contemporary copy of an original deed, and that the scribe mistook Emma for the shortened form of Christina. The absence of any seal, or signs of a seal, are rather in favour of this hypothesis; but I am inclined to think we have in Christina the name of Philip's wife, up to the present unknown.

In 1299, Nicholas de Tatlington, al. de Frankeley, sold the manor to Nicholas de Wythmale [cf. Nos. 46-50], and Thomas de Tatlington, the former's son, released, in 1319, all his right in the same to Adam de Herwynton, clerk [cf. Nos. 80, 81]. After many transfers of tenancy, most of which can be traced by reference to these pages, Thomas de Littelton, Esquire of the Body to Henry IV, Henry V, and Henry VI, recovered the manor in 1407 by writ of right, on failure of issue to his cousin Thomas de Tatlington, and in spite of the several mesne conveyances which had from time to time been made.

Thomas de Luttelton's wife Maud surviving him, and error in making Lucy de Bosco the wife of Thomas, instead of Edmund (cf. Nos. 28, 29); and also in making John the third son a bachelor (cf. No. 57).

marrying again, passed away her right in Frankley Manor to John Massey, her second husband [cf. No. 314], who, in his turn, seems to have conveyed it to Roger Tyrchare, Rector of Old Swinford [cf. No. 414]; for that deed, dated 1480, records the quit-claim of the manor from the last-named to Sir Thomas Lyttelton, Knt., the celebrated Judge, grandson of his namesake above referred to. From that time to the present, says Nash, with the exception of about a year and a half when the Crown took possession of it, on the attainder of John Lyttelton in 1601 for complicity in Lord Essex's plot, the manor has remained in the hands of the successive representatives of the Lyttelton family.

One further fact remains to be mentioned, namely, that in 1642 Frankley Hall or Manor-house was garrisoned for the King by Prince Rupert, but when he could no longer hold it, he burnt it to the ground, to prevent the enemy making the like use of it. It was never rebuilt, but since that time the family has resided at Over Arley or at Hagley. A reference to the burning of some of the Lyttelton evidences at this destruction of Frankley Hall may be seen in No. 458.

2. The parish of Halesowen is now reckoned as part of Worcestershire, as its geographical position warrants, and as it was considered before the Norman Conquest. But from that period till the beginning of the present century it was held to be part of Shropshire. The reason was that it formed part of the vast possessions with which William the Conqueror endowed his kinsman, Comes Rogerus, that is, Roger Montgomery, afterwards Earl of Shrewsbury. He was son of Hugh, Count of Montgomery, in Normandy, and for his services to William, on his invasion of England, he received the whole of Shropshire, besides numerous lands in Sussex. Amongst other properties, the parish of Hales, or Hala, as it was then called, (except Warley, Cradley, Frankley, and Ludley, also parts of that parish, which went to the Lord of Dudley), fell to his share, and it was then that the parish was made part of Shropshire. Respecting the addition of the name of Owen to the place, no satisfactory explanation has been given. Nash has suggested, but with hesitation, that when an abbey was founded in 1240 at Hayles, in Gloucestershire, it became necessary, in order to avoid confusion, to distinguish the older foundation by a cognomen, as both abbeys were in the same diocese of Worcester, and that Owen was fixed upon as being probably the first abbot of our Hales. There is, however, no evidence to prove this; and later, in the Appendix to vol. ii, p. xxiii, Nash does not venture to include Owen in the list of Abbots, even with the saving addition of a (?). In the other known lists, viz., Dugdale's Monasticon, vi, 927, and in Cole's MSS., vol. xl (Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 5841, f. 34), in a letter from Bishop Lyttelton to Mr. Cole, no mention of an Abbot Owen is made. Mr. Noake, in his Guide to Worcestershire, 1868, p. 182, is careful not to repeat Nash's suggestion. In casting about for an explanation of this addition, I venture, with much diffidence, to call attention to the fact that the name of the first tenant of Hales, under Roger Montgomery, was Olwin; and that he was no mean person is proved by his being tenant of several important lands in this neighbourhood, when Domesday Book was drawn up. May not Owen then be a corruption, or a softening, of Olwin? This argument, if such it may be called, is much weakened by the fact that the earliest mention of the place as Halesowen is not till more than a hundred years after Olwin's time.

The descent of the manor is as follows:—

It is with reference to the sale of this manor by Sir R. Dudley in 1558 that we have three of the most interesting deeds in the collection. For, at the foot of Nos. 440, 441, may be seen the signatures of Lord R. Dudley and of "Amy Duddley". It is scarcely necessary to remark that this is the unfortunate Amy, daughter of Sir Hugh Robsart, whose sufferings and tragic death at Cumnor, the house of Anthony Forster, Sir W. Scott has so powerfully portrayed in his romance of Kenilworth. These are, as far as can be ascertained, the only known deeds bearing her signature. The third of the set, No. 441B, bears the signature of Anthony Forster himself, and records the release of all the right which he possessed in Halesowen manor. They are dated 1558, two years before the death of the Lady Amy.

The deeds within these pages furnish much interesting matter concerning Halesowen, and readers are referred to the Index for the lists of Bailiffs, Vicars, etc. As regards the Abbey, attention may be drawn to Nos. 3, 39, 41., etc. Only seven Abbots' names occur, but amongst them one Nicholas, late Hen. III, is not included in Dugdale's nor in Nash's lists, though the latter quotes in extenso a document "ex registro albo penes Dec. et Cap. Lichfield", dated 1277, in which Nicholas is referred to as Abbot.

3. The manor of Warley-Wigorn is situated in the Worcestershire part of Hales parish, and was anciently called Werwelie. It was not included in William the Conqueror's grant to Earl Roger, but, like Frankley, formed part of the Barony of Dudley, of which William Fitz-Ansculf was the first representative after the Conquest. His successors, the Paganels, the Someries, and the Botetourts, became in turn the lords paramount of this manor, and under them the family of Fokerham held it. The deeds numbered 103-106 record the grant, in 1337, of the manor to Halesowen Abbey, the re-grant of the same by the latter to Richard Fokerham for his life, and the release by John de Sutton, Lord of Dudley, of his right therein. The Abbey held it till the Dissolution, when it passed with Halesowen to Sir John Dudley, and from him to Lord Robert Dudley. By the latter it was conveyed, in 1558, to T. Blount and G. Tuckey, who in the same year sold it to John Lyttelton, in whose family it has remained.

4. An account of Over Arley has been added by Nash in the Appendix to his History, though it is geographically in the county of Stafford, but he has inserted it together with similar notices of Clent and Halesowen Abbey, "as the accounts were drawn up by Bishop Lyttelton". It is there stated that Arley Manor came to the Lytteltons in 5 Edw. IV (1465), which statement is borne out by reference to these deeds, Nos. 379-382. From that time till 1779 it remained in the Lyttelton family, when Thomas, Lord Lyttelton, left it by will to his nephew George, son of his sister Lucy, wife to Viscount Valentia. From 1660-1693 it was the chief seat of the Lytteltons. The previous history of the manor is fully illustrated in these pages, and the appended table shows its descent till it came to the hands of Sir Thomas de Lyttelton. The deeds, Nos. 351-355, which record the connection of Richard, Duke of York, with the manor, are signed "R. York", and bear impressions of his seal.

5. The remarks which have gone before concerning the descent of the Manors of Frankley and Warley will also apply, as far as the lords paramount are concerned, to the Manor of Hagley, which has now to be considered. A few notes, however, on the succession of the tenancy of the manor may be acceptable. The following table is drawn up practically from Nash's account of Hagley, corroborated, where possible, by references to the present deeds.

A deed, of which the principal interest lies in the signatures upon it, is No. 457, a commission to Sir C. Lyttelton to be Sub-Commissioner of Prizes within the Port of London. The commission, which is dated 15th March, 1671[2], was issued by the ministers known as the Cabal Ministry, and it is signed and sealed by each of the five members.

There is the usual collection of surnames derived from places, trades, etc. Of the former, the following are specimens (I omit the ordinary place-names formed by the prefix "de"):—Atte Pole, atte Schete, atte Nasshe, atte Yate, del Grene, or o' the Grene, bi-the-herthe, in-the-putte, and the like. Of the latter, Heuster [i.e., Dyer], Breuster, Iremonger, Whelwhrete, and Deyster (the English equivalent for Tinctor, now Dyer), are fair examples. Other names worth noting are Godman, Godknave, Churchyard, Blacberd, Kachemare, etc. Of Christian names, the most curious, perhaps, are Emmota, Laurentia, Tibota, and Wauthleana.

In conclusion, I cannot refrain from cordially acknowledging the hospitality of Lord and Lady Cobham on my visits to Hagley, and the readiness with which the former agreed to my suggestion to have these muniments examined, arranged, and described. The thanks of all local and other antiquaries are due to his Lordship for his permission to have the catalogue printed. If, as is rumoured, it should be seriously contemplated to take in hand a new History of the County of Worcestershire, it is to collections like these that the compilers of such a work will first have recourse, to form the basis of their history; and it is those owners who, possessing such invaluable records, have had the inclination and courage so to order them that they may be consulted without undue trouble or waste of time, who will earn and receive the historians' gratitude. The latter will, I am sure, knowing, as the present writer also does, of the many similarly valuable collections in the county, join him in uttering a fervent "O si sic omnes".
